A walk-in cooler is exactly what its name implies: a cooler large enough simply to walk into. It can be as small as a closet or as large as a good-size room, however its primary purpose is usually to provide refrigerated storage for big quantities of food inside a central area. Experts declare that your operation requires a walk-in when its refrigeration needs exceed 80 cubic feet, or if you serve a lot more than 250 meals per day. Once again, you will need to figure out how much you need to store, what sizes of containers the space for storing must accommodate, along with the maximum level of goods you'll want to have on hand. The only way to use walk-in space wisely would be to equip it with shelves, organized in sections. Exactly how much sq footage do you require? The easiest formula is usually to calculate 1-to-1.5 cubic feet of walk-in storage for each and every meal you serve each day. Another basic calculation: Take the total number of linear feet of shelving you've decided you will need (A), and divide it through the amount of shelves (B) you'll be able to devote each section.
